Southern Highlands Reserve (“SHR”) is a nationally recognized native plant arboretum and research center located in Lake Toxaway, NC. The organization, established in 2002, is a 501 (c) (3), non-profit corporation with deep experience in high elevation native plant management, propagation, and restoration. Set among 120 acres along the Blue Ride escarpment of the eastern continental divide at an elevation of 4500’, the site includes a 22-acre display garden and propagation facilities.

The Reserve is comprised of staff and volunteers collectively working to create an awareness of and education about the ecosystems of the Southern Appalachian Mountains. Among other projects, SHR has been at the forefront of red spruce restoration in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and is a charter member of Southern Appalachian Spruce Restoration Initiative (“SASRI”). Staff at SHR collaborate with other organizations such as US Forest Service, US Fish & Wildlife Services, The Nature Conservancy, and North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission to establish a framework for mapping, planning, and completing red spruce restoration projects. To date, SHR has grown over 10,000 mature red spruce seedlings and planted over 2500 red spruce trees on public land with other SASRI partners and volunteers.

Since inception in 2002, integrity, stewardship, and excellence have been hallmarks of the organization. These principles are carried forward from our founders, Betty and Robert Balentine. SHR is actively seeking to grow partnerships and recruit like-minded professionals to assist in its expansion.
